FORMER PRICES SMASHED

Each and Every Piece of Merchandise Newly Priced to the Lowest Level

"Comparisons are odorous," but all things in life are comparative with something else. Take the case of discounts or percentages off.

A 50 percent off of a certain price at one time might mean a wonderful cut, at another time it amounts to nothing. Last fall, when goods were much higher than they now are, if a discount of 50 percent had been offered, as is being offered by some today, it would have meant a great reduction to the retail buyer, but that same reduction now, on those same goods, means little, because the wholesale price of those same goods, in many instances, has been reduced so much and more, consequently cutting the price in half on the goods bought then, really only means that those same goods are being sold for a price which could easily be profitable at the present wholesale quotation.

T. L. Gant & Co.'s policy, insofar as practicable, has been and is, to quote net prices, instead of discount and percentages off, and the buying public, on consideration, will concede that it is better for them to buy new spring goods at a net quotation, at prices as low or even lower than old or out of style goods offered at a great discount off from last fall's prices. For when sifted down, this means no more, and sometimes not so much, as the net prices on the new goods now being quoted by the T. L. Gant & Company store.

The thoughtful buyer should give this matter full consideration, as it will vitally effect the purchasing power of a dollar.
